Non-alumni may receive the magazine by contributing to the Annual Giving Fund or by subscription: $2 per year; single copies, 50 cents. Second class postage paid at Greensboro, N. C.

Cover Note: The UNC-G Theatre is celebrating its 50th birthday this year, and the cover design by Betty Jane Gardner Edwards '62 features some of the plays presented by the theatre in its first half century. "The play's the thing," Shakespeare wrote nearly 400 years ago, and while drama may not "catch the conscience of a king," it most certainly has brought pleasure to many generations of theatregoers on campus.

University Theatre Celebrates

It was fifty years ago plus one that W. Raymond Taylor, a tall, lean young man with a strong love for the theatre, came to what was then the North Carolina College for Women. He came at the invitation of President J. I. Foust to develop work in drama and speech. This was the beginning of today's UNC-G Theatre, one of the oldest drama programs in the country and second oldest (among colleges and universities) in North Carolina.

As a matter of record, it should be noted that drama had existed in a variety of forms since the earliest years of State Normal and Industrial College, as UNC-G first was known. The first significant dramatic venture was a State County Fair, presented on November 30, 1894, under the direction of four students, including Sethelle Boyd Lindsay, now of Winston-

Salem. It was so well received, the program was repeated for the Educational Committee of the General Assembly on February 12, 1897, in the hope that legislators, after viewing the tableaux, might be prevailed upon to loosen the state purse strings for the benefit of the fledging female college.

There were other dramatic entertainments through the years, chiefly put on by the literary societies which seemed to favor plays featuring Grecian dancers, judging by the pictures in the Early Drama File in University Archives.

Incontestably, the greatest dramatic presentation of the first 30 years was the May Day Fete of 1916, directed by Mary Settle Sharpe, in celebration of the 300th anniversary of Shakespeare's death. Four years in the planning with the entire campus taking part, the festival featured four plays which were presented at different locations on the campus before an estimated 3,000 spectators. Historians of the time recorded the event as the largest ever undertaken by any female institution in the North or by any institution, male or female, in the South.

With the exception of the May Day Fete, drama was an uncoordinated effort when W. Raymond Taylor arrived on campus. "Drama work was done in fits and starts," he recalls. "There was a senior class play, another play done by one of the literary societies, and a third play performed by a group of students called The Masqueraders. I directed these three productions my first year, then persuaded the students to give up their rights to give plays in order to form an entirely new type of organization. At a meeting of the student body, the authority to do plays was relegated to our new organization, the Dramatic Society of the college."

THE FIRST SEASON

The first season's bill included Shaw's You Never Can Tell, Broadfoot's Whatever Happened to Jones

(which was the first play Taylor had directed at Chapel Hill), and Oscar Wilde's Lady Windemere's Fan. Anne Cantrell White of Greensboro and Marie Bonitz Darrin, now living in Asheboro, were leading members of the cast of the Wilde play which made quite a hit and got the society off to an excellent start.

Meanwhile, Taylor had become "Teacher" Taylor to his dedicated students. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill and Harvard, Taylor was born with a self-described "yen for learning," a yen which he was able to transmit to his students who still call him "Teacher" Taylor today.

"Plays at that time were done in the auditorium on the second floor of the old Student's Building which stood near the Alumnae House," Taylor remembers. "The stage was very cramped and limited, and there was no means of handling scenery and no lighting to speak of. We managed somehow, and I think our students got training in how to make do with nothing, which stood them well when they went out to take charge of dramatics in the schools and in the communities where they became the leading spirits of drama.

"We had little or no space in which to construct scenery or make props or to put the productions on the boards. Dr. Foust finally let us have a couple of rooms upstairs in the Administration Building which was all right for us but not for the other inhabitants of the building. The teachers complained about hammering and noises and also about the foul smell emanating from boiling or rotting glue. After we built the scenery upstairs, we had to bring it down the fire escape and carry it across the street to the Student's Building. In high winds, these scenic flats sometimes acted as airplane wings and took the students 'home,' but it was a pleasant time. I remember those days with great warmth and pleasure."

The following year, in 1923, the drama group took the name The Playlikers from the title of a play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero. Their first production under the new banner was, appropriately enough, a play by Pinero, Sweet Lavender, followed by Tarnish, a new play on Broadway by Gilbert Emery. Even in New York, Tarnish was a shocker.

In 1910, girls were still playing men's parts in dramatic productions, but they had progressed from black skirts to bloomers. Pictured above is a scene from James M. Barrie's The Little Minister, showing Laura Weil Cone, originally from Wilmington, as the little minister and Frances (Bonnie) Broadfoot Claypoole of Fayetteville.

IN 1894, "County Fair," the first dramatic production on campus, was presented and then revived in 1897 for the educational committee of the state Legislature. The group above represents Mecklenburg County as the "Hornets' Nest," one of 87 tableaux representing as many counties. According to an often-told tale about the Durham tableau in "County Fair," the girls sewed on their dresses cigarettes which they later smoked. News of the scandalous deed spread across campus and throughout the state. A faculty meeting was called and punishment meted out.

"I don't know why I wanted to do Tarnish, but I did. It was pungent and strong and dramatic . . . about a bootlegger's daughter and a girl who was supposed to be living in sin with the bootlegger. I saw it in New York and got the right to do it four weeks after it opened. Some people in Greensboro had either seen it or some of the faculty had heard about it. They immediately protested to Dr. Foust. He called me in and said, 'Taylor, we don't have bootleggers on this campus, and we don't have any women living in sin. What about this play?' I told him it was as clean as a hound's tooth and as pure as driven snow. There were faculty and committee meetings about it, and on the basis of my standing sponsorship for it, we were permitted to do it. Dr. Foust wouldn't come to see the play, but his wife, the first Mrs. Foust, did. She was a very innocent lady and saw no sin or evil anywhere. She thought it was a good play and told Dr. Foust."

"TARNISH" POLISHES REPUTATION

Tarnish drew rave notices from no less a critic than Gerald Johnson, later editor of the Baltimore Sun, who was then on the Greensboro News staff. Mr. Johnson

IN 1926 men appeared in men's roles for the first time in "Fashion," when President Foust permitted male members of the faculty to appear in stage productions. The pioneering men were, left to right, Leonard B. Hurley, Forman Brown, B. B. Kendrick, Charles B. Shaw, H. M. Stanton, and A. C. Hall. had extravagant praise for the acting, noting in regard to the play itself, "The most remarkable thing about Tarnish, undoubtedly, is the conservatism of its name; it would have justified 'Oxidation' certainly, and probably 'Verdigris' as a title." Tarnish was taken downtown to the old National Theatre and was the first off-campus production of the Playlikers.

Later Dr. Foust did see Tarnish while in New York and when he returned. Taylor recalls being summoned to his office. "If I had known what you put on in that play, I would have kicked you out before you did it," Dr. Foust told him. Of course, by today's standards, it was as mild as Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm.

In 1925, the Playlikers presented "Will-o'-the Wisp," a one-act classic, in a nationwide contest at North-of the features they liked best. "We liked the Metropolitan Opera House but thought it was a bit beyond us. The Belasco Theatre was the one I liked most because Belasco had built it around his theories of realistic productions, that is, having the thing itself on the stage rather than a representation of it."

AUDITORIUM BEGUN

Aycock, begun in 1925, offered several trials during the construction. "Mr. Barton had designed the stage with a sloping roof at the elevation of the curtain pole which gave us only 25 feet from the stage floor to the overhead area where the scenery was supposed to be hung. I held out for a fly-loft. They made great fun of that term. Dr. Foust, who was a wit and a humorist beyond excellence, said, 'We don't want any place for flies around here. Miss Coolidge has all the flies she needs down in the kitchen. We're not going to have any loft for flies to fly around in.' But I held out."

According to Taylor, the architect did not want to destroy the lines of the building and a high stage housed in the rear of the auditorium would tear up his beautiful design. Dr. Foust said, "It will make it appear to be the devil's workshop, a real theatre, and we don't want a theatre on this campus." Taylor replied that Barton had plenty of ingenuity and talent and he could disguise this area so it would blend with other parts of the design. "With a little flattery like that, I got Mr. Barton on my side. Dr. Foust didn't say yea or nay. That was in the summer before the building was supposed to be started in the fall. He went abroad with his brother, Tom, for the summer, and while he was abroad, his daughter, Mary, died in childbirth. He, of course, came back home as quickly as he could. All the fun had been knocked out of him. He called me in one morning and said, 'Taylor, you can have your fly-loft.' Thus, we managed to get enough space above stage to give us a fairly adequate facility for the production of plays."

Girls played all of the male roles in the early days, and Taylor strived for as much realism as possible. He had them plait their long hair and put it down inside their shirt, and in blocking the action, he tried to keep them face forward. Eventually he persuaded Dr. Foust and Miss Harriet Elliott to permit male members of the faculty to appear in productions. Half a dozen faculty appeared in the first full-length Playliker production with orthodox casting, an 1850 Broadway success, Fashion, by actress-playwright Anna Cora Mowatt Ritchie. The pioneering actors were: B. B.

In 1924 "Tarnish," a Broadway play by Gilbert Emery, dealing with a bootlegger's daughter and a girl supposedly living in sin with the bootlegger, caused quite an uproar on campus. It was the first campus production to be given off campus when it opened in downtown Greensboro at the National Theatre on April 15, 1924. Pictured above are Leola Wood Rose of Benson, left, and Helen Leatherwood Hall of Fayetteville.

western University in Evanston, Ill., and won second place in the National College Theatre Tournament. Chicago critics praised the Playlikers, and Gov. Angus McLean saluted them on their return home.

It was not long after the establishment of the Playlikers that Dr. Foust decided it was time to have an auditorium on campus. "He made his pitch to the members of the legislature, and an excellent pitchman he was, too; then, both of us began putting down preliminary sketches for the architect, Harry Barton," "Teacher" Taylor recalls.

Dr. Foust delighted Taylor by taking him to New York to visit auditoriums and theatres, making notes

Kendrick, L. B. Hurley, Charles B. Shaw, Forman Brown, A. C. Hall and H. M. Stanton. After that it was not too difficult to extend the cast to include highly reputable men from the community.

"I remember it was a great pleasure to work with members of the faculty," Taylor recalls. "But, undoubtedly the greatest pleasure came in my association with "Mutt" Burton who has been a mainstay of the Playlikers since the early thirties."

W. C. "Mutt" Burton is a Reidsville native whose interest in the theatre began when, as a boy, he produced plays in a barn for 10-pins admission. In 1932 he was dating "Miff" Padgett, now Mary Frances Padgett Pfffer of Sarasota, Florida, who had the female lead in Berkeley Square. He joined the cast in the role of a British lord, and for a decade after, he appeared in every play the Playlikers presented in Aycock Auditorium. "Mutt", who now is a professional actor when he is not a newspaperman and columnist for the Greensboro Daily News, remains a stalwart of the UNC-G Theatre (he appeared in three of the six segments of musicals which made up the opening production of "Musical Pizzazz" October 4-7.

The auditorium was dedicated at the commencement of 1927, the year that all former students were asked to return regardless of their class colors or year. Between 1,200 and 1,500 returned, and most of them saw a Playliker performance, Barrie's Alice Sit by the Fire.

In 1926 "Craig's Wife," produced in November 4-6, 1926, was one of the last productions to be staged in Old Students Building, the drama facility on campus until Aycock opened in 1927. Members of the cast pictured above were: seated, De Alva Stewart Rodgers '28 of Brooklyn, N. Y.; W. R. Taylor; Sally Connor '30 of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and A. C. Hall; standing, A. T. West, Elizabeth Howland Dawson '27 of Morehead City; Clara Gill Wilkins '27 of Rose Hill, S. C.; Phoebe Baughan Barr '27 of University, Ala.; J. W. Painter; Laura Orleans Weinstein '30 of Greensboro; and H. R. Hulpiou.

For the next 40 years, Aycock was the campus theatre. It was where Raymond Taylor had his offices and lived a great deal of his life. He knows better than anyone the legend of Aycock and believes indeed that there is a ghostly inhabitant. He readily relates the facts behind the legend which is as much a part of Aycock as its stone columns.

THE GHOST OF AYCOCK

"At one time a sort of colonial mansion stood on the corner where Aycock is, and there dwelt an old lady all alone. She became extremely unhappy about her lonely state and went up into the attic one day and suspended herself from a rope on the rafters. Having committed suicide there, she determined to stay on as a ghost. When they tore down the mansion, I understand she haunted the area until Aycock was built and then she adopted it for her home. She seemed, when I knew her, to delight in the upper reaches of Aycock where she assumed the guise of lights that fitted on the ceiling, dragging chains and clanking objects over the floor.

IN 1927 Fadean Pleasants Van Tassell '28 of Bayport, L. I., N. Y., portrayed the title role in the production of "Chanticleer," one of the most elaborately costumed and staged productions in the campus' theatre history.

"The girls had a pocketful of stories about someone committing suicide in Aycock Auditorium, but there was never any suicide. There was almost a murder once. A very talented student who later did quite well in New York as a scenic designer worked for me for several years. She lived with her mother, an eccentric creature who didn't want her to date or have anything to do with a man. We had a male member of the cast who had played up to the girl and she liked him, too. The girl's mother learned about it and one rehearsal night, she went up to the paint gallery and got hold of a 25-pound weight which she suspended over the unsuspecting man. She dropped the weight from a height of about 60 feet. It came right down on the middle of his stomach and unbuttoned his vest."

Through the years "Teacher" Taylor drew an outstanding selection of assistants, many of whom achieved distinction later in various aspects of the theatre. A. T. West, whom Taylor had known at Auburn, became his first assistant in 1926. West left in 1929 to head drama at Duke University where he remained until his death many years later. During the depression years, there were no assistants although the Playlikers continued to flourish. During the 1936-37 school year Frances Stern Loewenstein of Greensboro was assistant. Marian Tatum, now the wife of Foster Fitzsimmons, dean of students at the North Carolina School of the Arts, came in the fall of 1937, remaining until the spring of 1941. In 1928 a second assistant, Wilbur Dorsett, was employed. With timeout for World War II service, Dorsett stayed until 1946 when he joined the Rollins College faculty in Florida.

Other assistants were: Sarah Click, 1941-42; Richard Corson, 1942-45 (Cordon's book on make-up is a standard text today); Marquis Patterson, 1945-46; W. T. Chichester 1946-47; Edward Fitzpatrick 1947-50; Wayne Bowman 1947-54; Caylan Collier 1947-48; Nathaniel White 1950-52; and Kathryn England, who joined the faculty in 1942 and is now in her 31st year as a teacher of speech and director of drama.

When Teacher Taylor speaks of Kathryn England, he praises her talent and dedication ". . . of more value to this organization than I could state if I praised her for hours. She's been the making of the art and dramatic work. . . ."

This brings the University theatre to the fifties when "Teacher" Taylor retired as director in chief. In 1953-54 Giles Playfair, son of the distinguished actor, Sir Nigel Playfair, was guest director and with Kathryn England produced George Bernard Shaw's The Apple Cart, Randall Jarrell's translation of Chekhov's Three Sisters, and Lysistrata. In the fall of 1954 a department of drama was set up under Michael Casey who had worked under Taylor at Parkway Playhouse, a summer extension of the college at Burnsville. Casey left in 1956, and Herman Middleton became head of the department at the beginning of the present period of major expansion and growth.

These later years, from 1953 through 1973, will be a part of the new issue of The Alumni News in the 50th anniversary year of the UNC-G Theatre. □

New University System Faces First Test

Authority on multicampus systems warns administrators and board of dangers in political involvements

Dr. Eugene Lee

The 1973 General Assembly which convenes in January will offer the first test of the new University system. Will political involvement be restrained or will legislative intervention continue, resulting in sectionalism and campus infighting for tax monies . . . the very situation that brought about the reorganization of higher education a year ago?

On September 22, administrators, campus trustees and members of the Board of Governors, who assembled in Chapel Hill for a review of the University's new guidelines, heard warnings that the new system can only be successful if the legislators permit it to work politically.

Highlight of the half-day session was an address by Dr. Eugene Lee, a top university administrator from Berkeley, California, who is an authority on multicampus university systems. A digest of Dr. Lee's remarks is reported on these pages to help alumni understand the complexities of the new system and some of the challenges facing the University in the next decade. Although 90 per cent of all four-year colleges and universities are part of multicampus systems, the North Carolina system is unique in its structure and form and for this reason is being carefully watched by higher education forces throughout the country.

FROM DR. LEE'S ADDRESS:

Dr. Lee noted that North Carolina, a pioneer four decades ago in the development of the consolidated university, has taken another step in an attempt to achieve better balance by retaining and establishing separate institutional boards. "At this juncture, this is one of the most important experiments in the governance of higher education to take place in recent years. It will be one of the most difficult experiments to pull off with effectiveness — an experiment filled with both promise and peril — but it is an experiment whose time has come."

He acknowledged that the multicampus system with a single board "had a spurt of popularity some years ago, dropped out of fashion for a period and now is making a comeback. In the last decade five states adopted this pattern in addition to the existing fourteen. And then in 1971-72, both Wisconsin and North Carolina have chosen this course of action so that now 21 states have adopted the single-board approach."

Noting that the organization of higher education will not in itself solve the problems of higher education in the 1970's, Dr. Lee said the organizational form will affect "the goals and values that control the life of universities and colleges . . . and will determine the response of these institutions to the more fundamental forces shaping higher education in the 1970's."

“ . . . proper exercise of the leadership responsibilities over university-wide matters will require that boards delegate a substantial degree of their present managerial responsibilities.”

What are some of these fundamental forces?

1. Enrollment growth which will be slowed in the 1970's although the variety of students will increase. “A slower rate of growth of more diverse students will pose much more strain on university systems than the more rapid growth . . . of a relatively homogeneous student population.”

2. Educational reform which will enable “students to exit from the University and enter society at a useful educational level for occupations they choose, to re-enter the University and study again, then move out again, so that education is considered a lifelong enterprise.”

3. Changes which will be more difficult to implement because “the addition of new activity may well mean the phasing out of an old one.”

4. Faculty members whose “collective activity will increase during the 1970's, whether in autonomous unions or in traditional senates.”

5. Public interest in higher education which “will become more intense as a larger proportion of youth and other age groups from a variety of backgrounds seek admission, and as budgets increase correspondingly.”

6. Pressures which are frequently contradictory. “For example, public interest moves in the direction of public control . . . but increased student and faculty activism works in the direction of local control.”

Dr. Lee listed five critical issues which are almost certain to dominate in the 1970's.

Academic Planning. Long-range academic planning must be intensified in new and different ways. “Far more attention must be focused on system-wide programs that capitalize upon the strengths and needs of several campuses instead of a curriculum based largely on . . . a nineteenth century academic calendar, higher education must turn to a career curriculum, based on the reality of lifelong education.”

Admissions and Transfers. Trends presently evident will be increasingly felt. Admissions policies will require substantial change. Increased counseling and guidance on the campus will be balanced by increased university-wide concern over admissions policy. . . . Central staff will provide increasing services to campus counselors, and perhaps even have operating responsibility for transfer of students between campuses.”

Budgeting. “The challenge to the multicampus university is to demonstrate its willingness and capacity to develop new concepts of financial measurement, to . . . evaluate its major cost factors, and to develop a basis for budgeting which will command the confidence of both professionals and politicians.” The equal challenge to the state is to “accept that much of the educational process cannot be reduced to formulas, that a high element of subjectivity is required in many budget decisions, and that these decisions can more properly be made by responsible university administrators than by state officials.”

Faculty. “Different kinds of faculty will be required to meet the widely differing needs of higher education in the 1970's. Collegiate, university and post-degree or continuing education programs will require quite different talents, patterns of recruitment, and systems of compensation. The creative containment of these differences may prove to be one of the most perplexing aspects of multicampus administration and one of the most important.”

Dr. Lee called for a reorientation of board activity . . . internally and externally. “Both internal and external pressures suggest the necessity — contrary to the criticisms of many students and faculty — for a strong governing board: to prod and support the administration, to make difficult decisions of educational policy, to hear appeals from the faculty and students, to interpret the university to a questioning and demanding community, and the community to the university — in short, to represent the public interest in the governance of the multicampus university.

“But, and here we come to the heart of the North Carolina experiment, proper exercise of the leadership responsibilities over university-wide matters will require that boards delegate a substantial degree of their present managerial responsibilities. Much of these can properly be assumed by system and campus executives. But other important areas of campus life would benefit by the kind of lay interest and evaluation in which system-wide governing boards now engage, often with little effectiveness. Campus executives need an outside forum against which to test new proposals; faculty and students need regular contact with the public constituencies the university serves. For their part, the governing board requires an evaluation of the progress and problems of the several campuses, which few boards can now successfully accomplish without sacrifice to their critical university-wide responsibilities. And they may properly wish to delegate certain jurisdiction to a campus subject to some independent lay approval.

“The excitement of the North Carolina experiment is that you can do just that — experiment. The division of authority between the governing board and the campus boards is not frozen in constitution or statute; you have the chance to proceed pragmatically. And importantly, you have the chance to proceed selectively, to try a new administrative approach or board delegation at one or another campus before making a critical organizational decision involving the whole university system.

“In making these decisions involving the division of labor, I would urge you to be bold. As a long-range goal, reserve for the university-wide board only those instruments of governance which are essential to insure specialization, diversity, cooperation — but give the local boards power to innovate, to experiment, to manage and — yes — to make mistakes. Perhaps as an operational rule — if the problem is not important enough to demand the attention of top-level administrators or the trustees themselves, then it should be decentralized.

“Secondly, I would warn against the dangers of overly-formal decentralization. Campuses must understand that demands for formal decentralization in many areas can lead to detailed and often inflexible rules and regulations which are far less sensitive to the particular needs of the campus than the admittedly subjective approach of the system executives. Both university and campus boards must insist upon strong and dedicated leadership from the chief executives of both system and campus, but trustees must understand the difficult situation under which both executives will often find themselves. Growing external pressures seem certain to increase demands upon the system executive to exercise ‘educational leadership.’ Yet any response he might make to these demands will run head on into the often fragile exercise of that leadership by the campus executives, who themselves need every bit of substantive and symbolic authority they can muster. A division of labor is essential, but it requires a high degree of sensitivity and flexibility on the part of both executives, a tolerance for ambiguity as to their respective authority, and a considerable measure of personal trust.

“What is equally certain is that the central and campus boards must themselves recognize the sensitive and ambiguous nature of their own relationships and the critical importance of personal trust. This is not to suggest for a moment that there will not be tension and controversy. The goal must be to make this tension a source of creative and constructive activity. Can the multicampus universities meet the challenge of change? Can they promote far-reaching innovation and preserve the best of the past; provide first-rate undergraduate collegiate programs and maintain graduate centers of excellence, expand to enroll several thousand more students and avoid the perils of uncontrolled growth; meet the needs of an increasingly complex society; remain free from crippling political involvement and interference?”

The answer can be yes, for the multicampus university has by its very nature a special potential in its unique ability to promote specialization, diversity, and cooperation. These characteristics can be a critical cutting edge of higher education in the 1970’s.

But these advantages will not be realized automatically. One underlying condition must first be met: The multicampus university can meet the challenges of the 1970’s only if, in fact as in theory, it can develop as a system. More than in the past, the multicampus university must be greater than the sum of its parts.

This is the charge which the people of North Carolina, through their legislators and their governor, have placed upon the Board of Governors. The higher education world is closely watching and is betting that once again, as in 1931, North Carolina will prove a pace-setter for the nation. □

Alumna Keeps Hectic Pace With Nader

For the past year Deanna Moore has been working on Nader's most ambitious project, an investigation of Congress. Her husband, Beverly Moore, Jr., is one of a score of bright young lawyers who are dedicated Nader Raiders.

Deanna Isley Moore '67

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader entered the public limelight in 1966. The issue then was the slaughter on our highways which each year takes the lives of more Americans than have died on Vietnamese battlefields during the last decade. Nader has since tackled a broad spectrum of other problems, including pollution, taxes, dangerous food additives, regulatory agencies such as the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, deceptive advertising, and the failure of antitrust enforcement to curb the price fixing and monopoly which are important causes of today's inflation. These are problems which affect us all—particularly in our pocketbooks—yet the average citizen is seldom aware of them.

Did you know that federal farm price supports cost consumers at least $10 billion each year in higher taxes and food prices? Did you know that each year the damage caused by air pollution totals at least $16 billion; that the oil import quota raises your gasoline and heating oil bills by $5 billion; that you pay higher taxes to offset nearly $50 billion in loopholes used by other taxpayers; or that accidents at home, on the highway and at work cost at least $30 billion. These are only examples. The total cost to consumers of the favors which our government has bestowed upon powerful corporations and other special interest groups is in the range of $250-$300 billion, compared with an annual Gross National Product of $1,000 billion.

Ralph Nader and his "raiders" seek to bring these problems to the public's attention and to propose solutions. Nader's Washington staff includes thirty-five full-time lawyers, engineers, and other professionals dispersed among a handful of small research groups. They toil at least sixty hours a week at low pay in return for the personal satisfaction that their public interest work produces. For example, graduates of the leading law schools often begin working for Nader for $4,500 per year, while the starting salary they could earn with Wall Street law firms is $18,000 per year. Nader pays himself an annual salary of $5,000. He lives in a one-room apartment with a pay phone in the hall and owns but three suits (apparently) and no car.

In addition to the permanent paid staff, there are a large number of volunteers and up to 100 summer "raiders," mostly students with subsistence pay. Last year the total budget for Nader's operations was about $500,000, most of which came from Nader's lectures and charitable donations. General Motors, which occupies much of Nader's attention, rakes in $500,000 every twelve minutes, although it recently had to contribute $420,000 to the Nader cause as a result of an invasion of privacy lawsuit. (Among other tactics, GM hired four young girls who attempted, unsuccessfully, to seduce Nader.)

Nader and his raiders bring the issues to the public in a variety of ways. They testify before Congress, bring lawsuits, petition government agencies for new rules, issue press releases, and publish voluminous "Nader Reports" focusing on particular government agencies and corporations. Where does Nader get his information about the scandalous state of affairs which permeates the fabric of American society? The bulk of it is no secret. It is found in dust-covered volumes of congressional hearings, technical government publications, obscure academic journals, and other public documents. These materials have only to be ploughed through, assembled and disseminated in layman's language. In addition to drawing upon already public information, we interview government officials and others in order to piece together the inside story of how and why the things that we report happen. Scrupulous care is taken to insure the accuracy and fairness of our Reports, all of which are carefully reviewed by Nader himself prior to their publication. This is not a mere matter of our own honesty. If we were to err, our targets—government and large corporations—have the financial resources to destroy our credibility with the public to whom we are accountable.

What is it like, personally, to work for Ralph Nader? Beverly, my husband, was recruited to work for Nader for the summer of 1969 by Bob Fellmeth, a Harvard Law School classmate. The summer before, Fellmeth had been one of the handful of Nader's Raiders (including Tricia Nixon's husband, Edward Cox) who produced the first Nader Report. It detailed the incompetence of the Federal Trade Commission as a consumer protector and ultimately led to that agency's reorganization. Beverly's assignment was to help Joseph Yablonski defeat the United Mine Workers' President Tony Boyle in the next fall's union election.

For Nader, the UMW represented the ultimate in the institutional corruption of the organized labor movement. Boyle and his cronies had entrenched themselves in a self-perpetuating dictatorship, depriving the union membership of basic democratic rights, squandering union dues on lavish salaries and conventions, and mismanaging the union pension fund. Meanwhile, scant attention was paid to the plight of the coal miners, tens of thousands of whom were afflicted with "black lung," a disabling and sometimes deadly occupational disease. Thousands of federal mine safety violations went unchallenged by the Boyle regime as countless union members continued to be killed and maimed in the mines. Yablonski, himself a high union official, courageously broke rank to challenge Boyle's re-election. Nader hoped that the ensuing struggle would spark the revitalization of the once progressive labor movement.

And, as Beverly soon learned, courage was indeed required. Hampered from the start by lack of campaign funds, Yablonski was physically assaulted, threatened with loss of his union positions, and his supporters intimidated. During the summer, Beverly maintained constant contact with miners in the field in order to help document over 100 Boyle violations of the union election laws and to bring a series of lawsuits against the union.

When we left Washington in August to return to Harvard, Yablonski's campaign was picking up but the odds were ultimately too overwhelming. Yablonski asked Secretary of Labor George Schultz to overturn Boyle's victory because of numerous election law violations. Only after Yablonski and his family were brutally murdered on New Year's Eve did the Labor Department decide to intervene, which it had repeatedly refused to do earlier.

The next summer, after graduating from law school, Beverly began working with Nader full time, investigating and preparing a report on government anti-trust enforcement. That winter and spring was like a continuation of the law school routine. Instead of working all night in the school library, Beverly and his colleague, Mark Green, were laboring around the clock, interviewing, telephoning, and writing, to complete their 1,200-page report, The Closed Enterprise System. Meanwhile, I could only spare three days a week as a secretary for one of the Nader groups—because I had to spend many hours typing for Beverly, who, unfortunately for me, never learned how.

In October I began working with the largest and most ambitious Nader investigation yet, a project which will probe all significant aspects of the Congress. Beginning with the fundamental issues of how congressmen are elected—who votes and why, who finances campaigns, and what issues voters are exposed to—the study will then analyze the internal workings of Congress: the committees, the seniority system, the appropriations process and so forth. My task is to help co-ordinate the activities of 535 volunteers who will collect information in each district on how each congressman relates to his constituents. When the final report is published, every voter hopefully will be able to evaluate the performance of his congressman and to vote accordingly.

Since only two of us are responsible for finding, coordinating and communicating by phone and mail with all 535 volunteers, you can imagine the frantic pace of our work. Because of our deadlines, there is at least one crisis every week. For example, one day, after being on the job for eight hours, I had to type for twenty straight hours in order to get our basic field questionnaire to the printer on time. Beverly's pace is similar. The last time he appeared before a congressional committee, after a sleepless night of writing, typing and mimeographing, he had to sit on the floor in the hall of the New Senate Office Building collating 100 copies of his eighteen-page statement up to the time he was to testify, as bemused passersby looked on.

One crisis which we shall never forget was Beverly's presentation of Ralph's testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee. He opposed a bill which would have overruled four Supreme Court decisions by allowing the politically powerful El Paso Natural Gas Company to retain control of a competing gas pipeline system which it had acquired in 1957 in violation of the antitrust laws. He had about five days to do the necessary research.

The night before the hearing, I typed the testimony as Beverly drafted it after going without sleep for two days. Then we had to wait for a 2 a.m. long distance call from Ralph so that Beverly could read the twelve-page testimony to him. Some of the pages had to be retyped to include Ralph's changes and fifty copies had to be xeroxed for the press and the Senate Committee before 11 a.m. the next day when Beverly was slated to testify.

We had to get some sleep. I set the clock for 6 a.m. and went to bed, but Beverly inadvertently switched the alarm dial to the "off" position. Miraculously, I suddenly awoke at 8:30 a.m., screaming, "Get up." We dashed to the office where I frantically began typing. After that we literally ran ten blocks to xerox the testimony which then had to be collated and stapled. We flagged a taxi and headed across town for the New Senate Office Building. We ran down the corridor, opened the door to the hearing room at the very instant when Senator Hart was announcing, "and now for our next witness, one of Ralph Nader's associates, Beverly C. Moore, Jr." Perfect timing. If we had been a minute later, all our work would have been in vain.

People often ask us, "why the effort?" Are we after money? Not with our salaries. Power? Quite the contrary. It is clear to all who know him that Nader is motivated solely by a deep and sincere revulsion of the enormous gap between the performance of our institutions and their potential for serving human needs. He certainly has no political ambitions. Rather, he has opted to pressure the political system from the outside where he feels he can be more effective. Apparently he has made some headway. A recent poll indicates that 62 percent of Americans have heard of Ralph Nader and that, of these, 85 percent approve of what he is doing.

But that is not enough. The most frequent question that we receive in our mail is: "What can I do?" Nader and his associates do not attempt to coerce the political power structure by themselves. Our role is as a catalyst. We expose problems to the public eye and propose remedies. Then it is up to you and millions of others to become "public citizens" by informing yourself of the issues and pressuring your elected officials, local businesses and other institutions for change. You can do this by forming local groups focused on particular issues. Housewives can pressure supermarkets for unit pricing and nutritional labeling, for example. Homeowners who pay property taxes can fight the under-assessment of business properties. Do not ask for change. Demand it. Confront the opposition publicly. Carry your cause to your local media.

America is at a crossroads of crisis. Our schools are not teaching. Our "free enterprise system" is increasingly characterized by monopoly instead of competition. The fruits of our labor go disproportionately to the wealthy who control the political system which fosters the monopoly. The trend is well advanced toward a political-economic alliance between big government and big business which the latter dominates, flouting the will of consumers and voters. This is not what Thomas Jefferson and Adam Smith had in mind for our Republic. Only you can bring about the major surgery that the system requires. □

UNC-G Students Assist In Congressional Probe

A small group of UNC-G students were involved in Ralph Nader's encyclopedic study of Congress, the first volume of which appeared in early October under the title, Who Runs Congress—The President, Big Business or You?

At UNC-G, two Residential College students were chief probers, Rebecca Bosley, a junior from Grifton, N. C., and Mindy Kutchei of Greensboro, who transferred in August to UNC-CH for her junior year. Rebecca and Mindy had never met Nader, but they were chosen for the local project by Dr. Warren Ashby, Residential College Director, who was contacted by a Nader employee in Washington. The congressman they investigated was Sixth District (Guilford, Alamance and Rockingham) Representative Richardson Preyer.

Rebecca and Mindy interviewed Preyer at length, asking a long list of questions prepared by Nader's office, presumably by Nader himself. They used the same questions which were used by volunteers throughout the country, about 300 in all. Rebecca, a math major who hopes to enter law school after graduation, said they were careful not to interject personal questions. "There wasn't enough time anyway. It took a long time just to get through all of the prepared questions."

She found Preyer helpful and cooperative. Her 30-page interview covers such topics as the campaign promises he had made, the promises kept, the groups he had addressed during his two and a half terms in office, the time he spent with constituents, and the things he had done to help them.

Rebecca also found Mrs. Hazel Womble, the secretary who runs the Congressman's district office in Greensboro, most cooperative in answering questions about office correspondence and about such things as whether the district office doubled as a campaign office during election years. She also interviewed Jim Turner, head of the democratic party in Guilford County, and Jim Melvin, present mayor of Greensboro, who was Preyer's campaign manager in 1968 and 1970. She asked Turner and Melvin questions about campaign finances, party make-up, Preyer's close friends and contributors, and about his political enemies.

Rebecca drew no conclusion from the extensive interviewing, but she was impressed with Preyer. "It was a great experience, although we did not get to do all of the interviews we were assigned to do. For example, we didn't get an opportunity to talk with Pete Barham, Preyer's opponent in 1970."

Rebecca would like to work for Nader again although the work is very demanding. "Everything Nader does is incredibly thorough, and it takes a lot of time to carry out. The people we interviewed were surprised by the length and thoroughness of the questions, but they cooperated because they seem to think it was worthwhile." □

Consumer Protection Is Alumna's Concern

by Ann Reed, Class of '69

Ann Reed, a native of Kinston, attended UNC-C from 1965-67 transferring to UNC-CH where she entered the University Law School under a combined degree program. She was an intern with the Governor's Commission on Law and Order during the summer of 1969 and the following summer interned with the N.C. Attorney General's office where she now works.

Just a few years ago it was the common practice of a number of stores in North Carolina to advertise "specials" on certain items, deliberately failing to note that there were only two or three "specials" for sale. Some stores went further, advertising items at bargain prices, failing to stock any of them or instructing their salesmen not to sell these items. Such deceptive practices lured customers into the store where they were victimized regularly.

Very little could be done under the laws of North Carolina to prevent these unscrupulous practices until 1969 when the General Statutes were amended to prohibit "unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." North Carolina was one of the first states to adopt this style of legislation, patterned after federal law also designed to combat unfair trade practices.

This prohibitive legislation gave Attorney General Robert Morgan the power and duty to enforce the Consumer Protection Law, and a division was created in anticipation of the new responsibility.

I joined the staff of the Attorney General's office in September, 1971, with the title of Associate Attorney assigned to the Consumer Protection which was created to enforce Consumer Protection laws. The "unfair and deceptive" practices which constitute violation of our law are not specifically described in the North Carolina law which states only that a violation of the law will be "unlawful". The state's only recourse is to ask the court to issue an injunction against continuation of the activity.

The Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's office has asked the courts to enjoin a number of activities, some of which are familiar because they have aroused considerable public interest. But a majority of the division's activity is not publicized.

Hundreds of complaints come in every week about consumer problems. Our division acknowledges every complaint and in most cases contacts the manager of the business to let him know the nature of the complaint. Many businessmen appreciate knowing of complaints. They can change policies which are offensive to customers and thereby increase good will and customers. Most businessmen are basically honest and value their good name and customers.

There are some, however, whose basic business instinct is to cheat and defraud. In the following paragraphs are examples of some of the activities which the Consumer Protection Division has challenged.

Bait and Switch. This is the practice of luring customers into a store by advertising what looks like a tremendous bargain and then, once the customer is in the store, encouraging him to buy something other than the advertised bargain. In one case involving "bait and switch," the Consumer Protection Division sought the termination of advertising which offered a certain grade of beef at an extremely low price. The customers who went into the business establishment were discouraged from buying the advertised beef and were encouraged to buy more expensive grades which constituted 99 per cent of the store's sales.

Misrepresentation. In another instance, the sale of some ovenware was represented as being "just like Corningware." The price on the box said $89.50 for forty-one pieces. The salesman confided that they had the sets on a special closeout deal and were selling them for only fifteen dollars. Someone at N. C. State University tested the product and found that it was not just like Corningware but just like glass, and that it exploded when placed in direct contact with heat. Other merchants said that they would sell this product for no more than thirteen dollars. The Attorney General's office went to court against the salesman and got a permanent injunction which prohibits their making any misrepresentation regarding the products they sell.

Fake Guarantees. In another action, a company that attempted to sell courses of study for computer training has been ordered not to represent that its graduates are guaranteed jobs. The injunction against this company also provided that the company would no longer represent to prospective students that the decision to enroll had to be made immediately since the salesman supposedly would be permitted to accept applications from only two more residents in this state.

These examples represent some of the actions which we have taken under the 1969 Consumer Protection law. The 1971 General Assembly which passed additional laws to protect consumers used records of the Consumer Protection Division to substantiate the need for additional consumer protection legislation.

The support the Attorney General has received from the consumer and from the business community has been very encouraging. However, North Carolina is a large state and the number of people working in the area of unfair and deceptive trade practices is small. For this reason, the Attorney General needs the assistance of every consumer in his work. Alumni who suspect unfair or deceptive trade practices should take action. Inform the company manager of your complaint, inform area and trade organizations, and please let the Attorney General know. It is only through the combined efforts of the business community and consumers working with the Consumer Protection Division that North Carolina can become a state where honesty in advertising and fairness in business practices can be the rule. □

Alumna Surveys the Other Side of Ecology

At a recent editorial board meeting, a student member suggested an article showing industry's position on ecology. Helen Morgan Harris, the wife of Carolina Power and Light President Shearon Harris, provides this view.

By Helen Morgan Harris, '41

There is no doubt that a realistic concern for the environment is highly desirable and that reasonable measures to prevent ecological damage are essential. It is unfortunate, however, that in the emotionalism which has accompanied our society's new-found concern for the environment, the need for a reasonable and timely approach to the problem is frequently forgotten.

To me it is especially ironic that American industry, which has done so much to give us the world's highest standard of living, finds itself sometimes characterized as the unrepentant villain of the environment. Such a characterization is grossly unfair. Through the years we as a society have demanded that industry produce more and better goods and services, seldom considering the side effects of those demands. Industry has responded by converting our resources into products and services that have stretched life spans and added to enjoyment of life itself.

Now a society is setting new priorities. We are taking a closer look at our standards as we consider the fulfillment of our consumer demands in terms of the additional cost of protecting the environment. It is inevitable that we are going to have to pay more for the same products and services. To reach reasonable ecological objectives is going to require time for an orderly transition, and, in many instances, the development of new technology through research and development.

We should keep in mind, too, that we require a healthy industry with steadily increasing production to support our population and to satisfy the aspirations of low-income people who are not yet sharing the benefits and the quality of life that results from upgraded skills, better jobs and higher incomes.

People who manage our industries, by and large, are making a sincere and responsible effort to respond to society's new demands that we clean up and protect the environment. A study released in May by the McGraw-Hill

Economics Department concluded that "American industry is definitely committed to a comprehensive program to improve our environment." The study revealed that industry and business plan to spend $4.9 billion this year to clean up the environment, 51 per cent more than the $3.2 billion spent last year.

Yet, the magnitude of the problem facing industry is underscored by figures taken from the same study which estimate that industry needs to spend $22.8 billion just to meet standards already in effect last January. At the current annual spending rate, nearly five years will pass before industry catches up to the present standards.

As my husband is associated with Carolina Power & Light Company, I am somewhat more familiar with how industry is using electric power in this fight to clean up our world. I am told that about 10 percent of Carolina Power & Light Company's new industrial demand goes to operate devices for treating industrial wastes. One company, faced with orders to clean up its smoke emissions, chose to shift to an all-electric operation instead of using fossil fuel. The firm is now virtually non-polluting.

Another Carolina Power & Light Company customer operates a scrap shredder which reduces junk automobiles and other scrap into fist-sized pellets of premium scrap steel. The shredder is helping solve two urgent problems: solid waste disposal, and the reduction of air pollution caused by traditional solid waste disposal methods which require burning.

An all-electric steel mill buys some of the pellets from the shredder operation and casts the metal into high-grade steel for building and manufacturing. Because the mill is all-electric, it lacks the polluting smokestacks traditionally associated with steel mills.

Another Carolina Power & Light Company customer converts used aluminum cans and bottles into useful products. A paper mill uses a closed system of water recycling so that water may be chemically treated and reused in the paper making process.

Along with other utilities, Carolina Power & Light Company is installing at its fuel-burning power plants electrostatic precipitators which remove 99 percent of the flyash from the smokestacks. The company uses high grade, low sulphur coal to reduce emissions of sulphur oxides and for many years has constructed "off stream" cooling lakes to protect streams and rivers near its generating plants from excessive heat. In addition, Carolina Power & Light Company is heavily committed to nuclear power, which provides the cleanest way yet developed to generate electricity.

The McGraw-Hill study mentioned earlier predicts that spending for environmental research and development will top $1.3 billion in 1975. Conducting these programs — and implementing the results — will be expensive. Ultimately the consuming public must pay the bill. Knowing this, we should insist that priorities be set to assure that the most critical needs are met first. Top priority should be given to those things that affect our health and well-being, while those areas of concern that add to our enjoyment of our leisure time or are aesthetic in nature should be lower on our list of priorities.

If this order of priority is accepted and everyone is willing to contribute to its development, our nation can tackle the problem in a systematic manner. If, however, we try to do everything at once, economic and legal chaos could very well result. Huge sums of money could be spent without taking into proper account the benefits to be received. Laws and regulations concerning environmental protection must reflect the practical and the possible, not the impractical, impossible dream of returning air and water to the purity that may have prevailed before the creation of man.

As consumers and taxpayers, we are in a position to work with industry in its goal of abating pollution. Since many of our problems are caused by sewage disposal systems of towns and cities, we can support and actively promote bond issues to provide modern facilities that avoid dumping raw sewage into streams and rivers. Inventive industry can provide the instruments required to do the job.

Like many essentially good movements, the environmental crusade has tended, in some instances, toward emotionalism and exaggeration. When viewed in the perspective of time, many of the charges and accusations have proved to be overstated. The report of Lake Erie's death, for example, has been shown to be somewhat premature. The lessons of the past should teach us patience. Industry may not be able to reach the ideal goal as rapidly as some would wish or as cheaply as others desire. However, the long and difficult journey to a cleaner world has begun.

Today, we find ourselves in a state of transition as goals and values which were accepted five years ago are changing. Some temporary measures may be necessary on an interim basis while better solutions to pollution problems are being developed. But, we all must realize that the solutions are within the realm of possibility in our economic system if we approach the problem in a rational manner.

The same ingenuity which gave birth to the flow of goods and services that daily enrich our lives is finding solutions to the pressing problems of our planet. Improved technology and enlightened American industry will be the guiding forces in helping make life better, not only for those of us privileged to have the comforts of this world but also for the underprivileged as we help them move toward a higher level of education, employment and productivity.

The most extreme environmentalists would shut down the whole industrial economy to achieve a pristine environment. In that event, our society would be made so miserable by lack of material means that we could not enjoy the environment we produced. □

"Third World" Discounts Ecological Crisis

UNC-G Biologist Paul Lutz encounters frustration at United Nations environmental conference in Stockholm, Sweden

THE environmental crisis is viewed as a figment of the white American mind by the Third World, the developing countries of Africa and Latin America, according to Dr. Paul Lutz, who attended the environmental conference in Stockholm, Sweden.

"We are saying 'Stop Pollution, stop overpopulation' and they're saying 'Sure, Whitey, now that you have it, you want to stop us from getting it,'" he explained. "The developing countries want to continue to develop. They don't mind if we want to practice environmental control, but they don't want us to tell them to do it, too."

Dr. Lutz represented the Lutheran Church as a member of a religious task force which hoped to have some input into the conference which was held under the auspices of the United Nations, but they were frustrated in their attempt because the two delegates from each country voted along political lines. "They were told how to vote by their governments in advance of the meeting," he explained. "There was no room for opinion-molding."

"It was a pretty sterile meeting that I don't think accomplished a great deal," he said, but added that important satellite conferences emerged including the Environmental Forum in which he participated.

The Forum argued over The Limits of Growth, a book published by a group from MIT this spring which computerized man's ecological past and projected its future. According to Dr. Lutz, the study found that if man continues as usual "we are in serious trouble. The Third World would say, 'No, that doesn't apply to us,'" he pointed out.

"The environmental crisis is not just one of pollution, resource utilization and overpopulation," he said. "But as a result of these, there are a number of people who are underdogs socially — the poor, the starving — 75 per cent of the world. The Third World says that the U. S. is guilty of this and we'll have to change our ways of doing things." □

UNC-G Makes the Political Scene

The name of the game is Politics, and UNC-G students are right in the middle — registering voters, campaigning, conducting polls, and sponsoring their own Political Week on the Greensboro campus.

POLITICAL WEEK

Political Week, a joint venture of the Residential College and the Political Science Department, focused on almost every aspect of politics during a five-day period October 16 - 20. Activities included a faculty panel which discussed campaign issues, a women's panel which examined women's rights in politics, and a black panel which surveyed the present and future role of the black in politics.

A "meet the candidates" night brought nominees for the State House and Senate, the County Commission and the Register of Deeds to Elliott Hall for brief presentations of their views on crucial issues. Students had extra time during the week with three candidates who paid separate visits to campus: U. S. Congressman Richardson Preyer, incumbent Democratic candidate; Lynwood Bullock, American party candidate; and Nick Galifianakis, Democratic nominee for the U. S. Senate.

Political observers have noted a definite upswing this year in student involvement in campaigns. Provisions have been made for some students to receive credit for their work through a workshop in practical politics which Dr. David Olson directs.

WORKSHOP ON POLITICS

The students enrolled are as varied as the issues of this campaign year. There's Angie Travis, a senior from Statesville, who works in Republican headquarters every Monday and Wednesday afternoon from 12:30 - 5 p.m. "I supported Jim Holshouser in the spring primaries because I felt that it was time for a change in North Carolina and that Holshouser represented the best chance the Republicans have had in over 70 years to replace the Democratic machine. . . . I do extra work in the dorm and attend rallies and Republican dinners and such. I love campaign work."

Byron Mohr is campaign coordinator on Lonnie Revels' 17-member steering committee in his campaign for state representative. Byron is a native of Kansas where he ran for the State House of Representatives two years ago (he won in the primary but lost in the general election). The father of three, the oldest of whom is in high school, he is a full-time student this year. Several years ago he and his wife decided they both wanted a college education, so he put her "through college"; now she is working to enable him to work toward a master's degree in public administration.

Byron's reasons for involvement in the Revels campaign are many. "I believe the one-party government in North Carolina is retarding progress and that one-party dominance dictates that government will be relatively corrupt. I believe competition is the best tool by which we can alleviate the problems inherent in one-party government. I believe that Lonnie Revels as a member of the minority party can be one of the needed tools by which we can make progress. Also, working in a campaign is an effective course in sociology and political science, two areas in which I am especially interested."

Karen, a sophomore from Roxboro, feels she has had many opportunities for discovery in working in the Galifianakis campaign. "I have met people representing every segment of life and have found that though some are older and some younger, we are able to communicate and, more importantly, understand one another. I'm also more aware of the community away from the school environment."

Steve Raeford, junior from Greensboro, serves as Democrat Charlie Webb's representative on campus in his campaign for the N. C. House. "I put up posters and do all I can to get him publicity. I go with him on campaign trips, and I worked for him at the Greensboro Fair handing out literature."

Merinda Swanson, a junior from Hayesville, is president of the Collegiate Young Republicans on campus and co-chairwoman of the N. C. Federation of College Republicans. "I was already involved in all the campaigns: national, state and local, so my internship with the political science workshop is concentrated on observing the different techniques used by Nixon, Holshouser and Helms teams. At least ten hours of my week are spent in Nixon headquarters where I learn the details of coordinating three campaigns. I recruit volunteers, stuff envelopes, coordinate dinners, rallies, and shopping center projects . . . and in general serve as liaison between the adult and youth parts in these three campaigns."

STUDENT POLL

Sixty per cent of the students polled recently on campus favor Richard Nixon in the upcoming presidential election. In a survey of 213 students taking basic or introductory political science courses at UNC-G, 31 per cent favored George McGovern and nine per cent were undecided, according to Dr. David M. Olson, head of the UNC-G political science department.

The bulk of the students polled were asked also their party preference. Of the 157 queried, 49 per cent said they were Democrats; 27 per cent, Republicans; and 24 per cent, independent.

(Editor's Note: A nationwide Student Vote poll showed that 39.3 per cent of students are registered as Democrats, 16 per cent as Republicans, and 37.3 per cent as independents. Surveys of student-rich precincts during last spring's primary elections showed that students went to the polls in about the same proportion as the general electorate but tended to support McGovern more than the older voters did.)

Dr. Olson stressed that students on the UNC-G campus as well as in most southern universities reflect the conservative viewpoint of their middle class parents who have enough income to send their children to college. "Students are not radically different from their parents except for the five per cent who look and act radically different. Remember that even during the radical student protests at Berkeley, less than five per cent of the student body was involved."

McGovern's popularity on the college campuses is largely a myth perpetrated by the media, according to Dr. Olson. "It is true that the most active and visible support for McGovern has come from college or recent college students, but it's not fair to turn the equation around and say that most college students support McGovern."

In explaining the discrepancy between the 31 per cent of those polled who indicated a preference for McGovern and the 49 per cent who listed Democratic party affiliation, Dr. Olson said that among students, as well as in the general population, many Democrats would be voting for Nixon.

"I would argue that on most southern university campuses, if you scratch the surface of an independent, you would find a latent Republican. The South is a region where you have a rapidly changing party system in which the minority party is beginning to become a serious competitor for public offices."

Dr. Olson estimated that approximately 90 per cent of the students polled were registered to vote prior to coming to school this fall, but he attributed that fact to well-organized county boards of election rather than to student political zeal.

"I think the high registration reflects that the executive secretaries of the boards across the state have had the time and energy to go where the new voters are, such as the high schools, to make it easy for them to register," Dr. Olson emphasized.

Students, like the American population on the whole, aren't extremely aware of politics, according to Dr. Olson. "Most students are politically interested and aware to the point that most people are. Politics to most people is a peripheral interest. Most people read the sports pages first and the news pages second, if at all. The good thing about an election year is that it brings about communication between the politicians and the people. The average citizen listens and participates in the political process by voting."

"These aren't firm choices," Dr. Olson said of the recent student poll. "There isn't that much indication that Nixon is a strongly attractive candidate. It's just that he's taken as the known and safe choice." □

Music major tours Europe; POW wife on campus

One semester lost from school was well worth it for Anne Bost of Clinton, a junior music major at UNC-G.

Anne dropped out temporarily to join the 12-member North Carolina Chamber Singers who spent several months last year touring Europe, giving over 50 concerts in England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and Austria.

"It was an education in itself," Anne explained, "and I'm so very grateful I got to go. It was good experience for any singer and it was a thrill to represent our country so to speak."

The group was headed by Dr. Robert T. Allen, a UNC-G English professor who was taking time from his teaching to earn his master's in music from UNC-Chapel Hill. Cindy Donnell '70 of Burlington, now a graduate student on campus, and Will Griffin of Durham, also a UNC-G graduate student, were members of the group.

They crossed Europe in rented Volkswagen busses. Concert stops included the famous English schools, Harrow and Rugby; Westminster Abbey; and Canterbury Cathedral. In one Swiss resort town, the people were so impressed with the chamber singers that they provided them with accommodations in a first class resort hotel for several days.

Anne aspires to a career in music, perhaps as a professional entertainer although she's a little wary of the demands such a career would make. Her future includes graduate school and a return to Europe, perhaps to work but certainly to travel. □

"For me, school is really a way to kill time while doing something constructive," explained Jean Breeze McDaniel, a graduate student in interior design at the University, and the wife of a prisoner of war held in North Vietnam.

Jean is part of a nation-wide trend in colleges and universities: women past standard student age returning to the campus for further study. According to an article in the Wall Street Journal, college officials estimate that there are close to 50,000 women over 30 on the nation's campuses this fall, about double attendance of a year ago. The article noted the fact that last year, UNC-G registered 179 women undergraduates over 28 years old, a 59 per cent increase in four years for the Greensboro campus.

Jean, who hopes to receive her degree next year, explained that she's squeezing in courses whenever she can. "I couldn't have classes after three o'clock because of the children. I build my schedule around their schedule." She has a daughter, 7, and a son, 10.

She works part-time in the office of Greensboro architect Clinton Gravely where she does color schedules, coordinating floor coverings and wall colors, mainly for church and apartment complex contracts.

"Without someone at home to help you, it's very hard to concentrate and study," she pointed out. "This year has really been a strain with two or three classes. But if someone wants to go back to school, especially if she has her husband home to help her, I'd say do it."

In addition to school and job, Jean works actively with the Guilford County Steering Committee for George McGovern. "At first I was for McGovern because I saw this as a way to get my husband home," she explained. "But after meeting him and listening to him, I am for him for many other reasons. He is someone with whom the average person can identify."

FACULTY

Dr. Richard Hudson Klemmer

Dr. Richard Klemmer, Professor in Home Economics and Chairman of the Child Development and Family Relations Division, died Tuesday morning, September 12, 1972, while at work in his office. Students, faculty and friends joined the family for a late afternoon memorial service in Stone Auditorium on September 14.

Dr. Klemmer was the author of Marriage and Family Relationships (1970), Counseling in Marital and Sexual Problems: A Physician's Handbook (1965), and A Man for Every Woman (1959).

Dr. Klemmer also had two books in progress at the time of his death: Teaching About Family Relationships, being done in collaboration with Dr. Rebecca M. Smith, Assistant Professor, School of Home Economics, and Human Sexuality in Nursing Education and Nursing Practice with his wife, Margaret G. Klemmer, Assistant Professor, School of Nursing, UNC-G.

Dr. Klemmer, who joined the UNC-G faculty in September, 1967, with the rank of professor, also served that year as a clinical professor of family studies in the department of psychiatry at Bowman Gray School of Medicine, Wake Forest University.

During his career at UNC-G, he directed a two-year Teen-age Parents Project financed by a $50,000 grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation 1969-71, a project which was designed to help young mothers complete their high school education.

A licensed psychologist in North Carolina, Washington, and California, Dr. Klemmer was a fellow of the American Sociological Association and the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors and a member of the American Psychological Association and the American Home Economic Association.

The University has suffered a deep loss in the death of Dr. Klemmer. As a scholar he contributed substantially to the knowledge in his field through his publications. It was in his role as teacher and counselor that he will be greatly missed.

ALUMNI

'00 — Emma Lewis Speight Morris died September 19 at her home in Salisbury after nearly a century of service to her state, her community and her college. She literally became a legend in her own time, as Rose Zimmerman Post '47 noted in an article in the Salisbury Post.

It was a characteristic of Emma Morris that whenever she was praised for service, she would give the credit to someone else. This quality of modesty is evident in Rose Post's interview, a part of which is reprinted here because it reveals the special way of service of one alumnae.

FROM ROSE POST'S ARTICLE:

Books and service have been the warp and woof of Mrs. Morris's life.

Her father, she says, introduced her to a lifelong love affair with books. And Dr. Charles Duncan McIver, who believed that North Carolina should help educate its daughters as well as its sons, married her to service, convincing Emma Lewis Speight and all the other girls who went to his State Normal School in the early years as well as generations that followed, that they must graduate to serve the state that educated them.

And she learned a lot of other things from Dr. McIver and at his college. Dr. McIver himself taught a civics class, really a class in community service.

"See the real needs of the world," he would tell his girls, "and then do something about them."

So Mrs. Morris really had no choice. She was carrying out orders when she helped establish the Rowan Public Library and throughout the years that have followed. And that's all there was to it.

Members of the Rowan Public Library board of trustees, on which Mrs. Morris served for more than 60 years, know differently.

Mrs. Morris was Sunday School superintendent and director of religious education for years at St. Luke's Episcopal Church and served on state committees for the church and for the library.

She started the first adult education program in Rowan County when she found there were people in Rowan who couldn't read and write.

The classes continued for 14 years, and a lot of people who went to learn to read and write their own names stayed to learn something about their government and literature and all kinds of things they hadn't anticipated learning.

She's always looked to the future.

There was a meeting a few years back of the Rowan County Alumnae of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina. The question at issue was the change of the name to the University of North Carolina at Greensboro—and the outcry was loud.

Until Mrs. Morris stood up.

Easily the oldest alumna in the room, and the only one who could remember all the way back to the first name "that college" ever had, she had waited and listened before she had her say.

"Well," she told the group, "I remember when that college was State Normal and Industrial School. And then when it became North Carolina College for Women, and when it became the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina. Every time the name has changed there has been progress. And if more progress is in store for our college and our state, then I'm for the change."

'03 — Helen Ramsauer Hoyle, 90, died June 18 at Wesley Nursing Center. Born April 21, 1882, in Union Co., she came to Charlotte in 1907 where she joined Trinity Meth. Church and later was a charter member of the First United Meth. Church where she served as supt. of the Children's Dept. and two terms as pres. of the Wesleyan Service Guild. "A bunch of teachers would go to Rocky Mount on the weekend," she recalled. "The other girls would go shopping. I'd go bowling." Her climb in the duckpin world began in Durham in 1940 where she taught school and ran a* bowling alley. "I'd bowl 60 games some days. I'd bowl all day and most of the night and never get tired." Now she's a ten-pin bowler, having given up duckpins "simply because there wasn't any place you could bowl duckpins." She now bowls six league games a week and enjoys her pets, 14-year-old poodle Pitti Sing and cat Muffin. Her reaction on being named to the Hall: "I don't really feel I deserve it. All I ever did was something I enjoyed doing. If you love to eat, should you get a medal for eating?"

Emily in Washington — Tales of a congressman tooting his own horn and of Martha Mitchell's escapades regaled members of Greensboro's Church Women United in May when Emily Harris Preyer '39, wife of Congressman Richardson Preyer, spoke to their fellowship day. After discussing Washington's famous churches, Emily answered questions about Washington's political scene. Holding up a clipping of husband Rich playing a horn in the company of two other Congressmen, Emily explained, "A woman mailed this to us with the comment,

"Why are you up there in Washington blowing a horn when we sent you up there to lower taxes and fix up busing?" Asked about Martha Mitchell who then lived in a building adjoining her Watergate apartment, Emily said Martha "keeps the flag flying night and day. She still wears high heels and has a new patent leather suit. I play cards with her once in a while and she beats us all," she recounted. Emily quoted Martha as saying, "I am the best damn poker player in Arkansas."

Hostess — Running the social activities of the Governor's Mansion? "It's not that hard, you just have to be organized," explained Daisy Murray Pearce '31, mansion hostess-housekeeper under Governors Moore and Scott. Daisy loves the old mansion and hates the idea that it might be replaced by a modern home for the state's governors as Georgia's old mansion was. After visiting the new Georgia mansion, Daisy said, "It's lovely, but it's just a house. It doesn't have any character."

Obstacle-Hurdler — Ann Gibbs '72 (MEd) overcame cerebral palsy, writing difficulties, a speech impediment and lack of transportation. Today she has her master's, a job at Ft. Bragg, a brand new apartment in Fayetteville, and she's looking forward to getting a driver's license. Ann, who attended public schools, explained that she had never felt inadequate until she entered Guilford College and had trouble taking class notes. A tape recorder ended her problem. After graduation, she learned from the N.C. Dept. of Public Instruction that a speech impediment would prevent her teaching certification. With the aid of Guilford County Rep. Charles Phillips, she overcame this obstacle and the next year taught at Archdale Elementary School in Greensboro. Interested in library work, she enrolled at UNC-G to work on her master's in that area. The steep steps leading to Curry gave Ann problems but with "Mr. Charlie's" aid again, a sturdy hand railing was installed. As a librarian she enjoys especially helping handicapped children in the library.

Poor Theatre Launched — "Poor theatre does not mean a theatre for poor people," explained Randy Ball '70. "It means that the theatre operates with a minimum of cost." After reading Toward a Poor Theatre, by Jerzy Grotowski which stresses that the essence of the dramatic experience is acting and nothing else, Randy formed a new professional theatre company, Poor Theatre of High Point, Inc. While directing The Tempest as a UNC-G grad student, Randy used only platforms, three lighting instruments and $30 for costumes. The Theatre plans to take its productions directly into the community: churches, clubs and individuals can hire the company. The major budget item is actors' salaries with most company members, close friends of Randy's, working for $50 a week. Funds are being sought from the N.C. Arts Council, the Model Cities Program, and other philanthropic groups. In September, the Theatre presented "Open Window," a one-act study of a heroin addict by the late James Moore, former UNC-G drama student. Nine more plays are planned for the season.

THE BALLOTS for the Alumni Association's 1972-73 election of officers and trustees will be mailed to active (contributing) alumni in late October. Betty Anne Ragland Stanback '46 and Ellen Sheffield Newbold '55 will head "the ticket" as candidates for President. Mariljub Barwick Sink '44 and Hester Anne Bizzell Kidd '51 are candidates for the Second Vice Presidency. Running for positions as Trustees are Carol Furey Matney '63 and Jane Sarsfield Shoaf '52 (District 4), Deanie Chatham Calaway '55 and Clarice Ensley Rains '42 (District 5), Carolyn McNairy '25 and Mary Dale Shue Johnson '59 (District 6), Rachel Dunnagan Woodard '36 and Grey Riley Calvert '63 (District 7), Oliver Gilbert Hoffner '64 and Sarah Jackson Potter '51 (District 8), and Eleanor Butler '57 and Barbara Watry Thomas '68 (District 10). The date for the return of the ballot will be noted thereon.

THOSE FOR WHOM "OUR MOTTO SERVICE" has remained a meaningful directive surely deserve consideration for Alumni Service Awards which are awarded annually by the Association. To be considered, alumni must be nominated. Forms for nominating may be secured from the Alumni Office. Completed forms may be returned to the office or sent to the chairman of the Alumni Service Awards Committee: Mary Lib Manning Slate '61 (Mrs. Marvin L. Slate, Jr., 855 Westover Ave., Winston-Salem 27104). Serving as members of the committee are Lois Atkinson Taylor '26, Peggy Best Curlee '54, Francie Lynam Huffman '51, Martha McRae Alsup '37, and Anne Snyder Foltz '47. The deadline for receipt of nominations will be January 1.

THE HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS who want to be considered for Alumni Scholarships at UNC-G for next year (the 1973-74 session) must file applications with the Alumni Scholars Committee by February 1. The scholarships awarded will range from the amount of in-state tuition to a maximum of $1,000, the specific amount to be determined by financial need. Applicants will be considered on their academic standing, intellectual promise, character, leadership ability, and demonstrated ambition, as well as on their financial need. Application forms may be secured from the University's Student Aid Office.

THERE HAVE BEEN SOME CHANGES in the University's calendar which will make a two-week difference in our Season of Reunions next spring (1973). "School started" at UNC-G in mid-August; first semester exams will be completed before Christmas holidays; commencement and REUNION weekend will be May 11, 12, 13. Make note NOW of the earlier reunion dates. Don't be caught unaware. This early-word is especially applicable to the groups for whom reunions are being planned: the Vanguard, 1923, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1948, 1963, 1968.

UNC-G Chairs

Created from birch by expert craftsmen, the UNC-G chairs have a hand-rubbed, black lacquer finish with trim in gold and the University seal applied in gold by a silk-screen process. (The Arm Chair may be ordered with cherry arms.) Chairs are shipped from Gardner, Mass., by express collect. An Arm Chair weighs about 32 lbs.; a Rocker, 27 lbs., and a Side Chair, 18 lbs. Local express offices will approximate the express charges in advance. Use BAZAAR Order Form.

UNC-G Golf Balls

Golf balls bearing the UNC-G monogram and seal are available for purchase. Unconditionally guaranteed (except for loss), the golf balls are Liquid Center, have Balata Rubber cover, and meet all U.S.G.A. Specifications. They may be ordered in varying compression ranges. The price is $12 per doz. (tax and shipping included). Solid Center balls are also available @ $10 per doz. Use BAZAAR Order Form.

Travel Correction

There was a mistake within the PICK-A-TRIP ad on the back page of The Bulletin mailed in September. The correct dates for the LONDON trip are May 12-19 as noted in the display ad, not May 20-27 as listed on the clip-out coupon. The PICK-A-TRIP privilege extends to active (contributing) alumni and their immediate families.

Rap Line

... A Hot Line to UNC-G

Q. I understand that over a quarter of the student body now is male. Does the enrollment of more men mean a football team may be in the making?

A. Although the estimate is that UNC-G will reach 50 per cent male enrollment within the next five years, there is no plan to go in for a major program in athletics. Basketball, tennis, golf, soccer, swimming, and fencing are offered on the intercollegiate level at present, but there are no scholarships. A brief study was conducted to determine how UNC-G could become more competitive in basketball which is a less expensive sport than football. The cost figure that came up was a minimum investment of $100,000 for scholarships. In the present struggle to get the male athletic program underway, the feeling is that a decision on a football team is some time away.

Q. Is the University offering courses at Guilford Technical Institute? A friend of mine who is enrolled in biology at GTI says he will receive University credit.

A. Yes, credit for freshman level courses in biology, chemistry, psychology and sociology at GTI is given upon admission to the University. At GTI's request, the University provides instructors from the University faculty or UNC-G approved. The same arrangement is offered through Randolph Technical Institute which has a full freshman program.

Q. Boyd Collier must be a "friend of woman." I like the idea of his proposal for a new system of measuring the goods and services of a housewife (Alumni News, spring, 1972).

A. A federal study, which recently calculated the potential earnings of a mother who stays home until her youngest child is 14, found that the education level of the mother makes a big difference. Potential earnings outside the home of a mother with an elementary education were estimated at $44,121; a high-school-educated mother, $58,904; a college-educated mother, $82,467; and five or more years of college, $103,023. Thus, for a mother with a year of graduate school, the overall cost of two children would be over $200,000 in potential earnings.

Q. What has happened to the Continuing Education Child Care Center now that CEGC has closed its doors?

A. The Center is continuing operation under the sponsorship of the Alumni Association, in cooperation with the United Day Care Services, Inc. The Association feels that the Center provides an important service enabling mothers to attend classes, seminars or participate in volunteer activities while their pre-schoolers (ages 3-5) receive a growth experience too. For information about the program, hourly fees, etc., contact Minta McCollum Saunders '66 at 273-9451.

Q. I would like to transfer to UNC-G as an in-state student and pay in-state tuition. I moved to Greensboro in April from another state. The Registrar's office tells me that in order to qualify for in-state tuition rate, I have to be a resident of this state for a one-year period prior to enrollment. I thought a group of UNC-CH students won a decision before the State Supreme Court to have this length of residence requirement lowered to six months. Am I right?

A. A year's residency is still required in North Carolina before enrolling with the privilege of paying in-state tuition. You're right in stating that some UNC-CH students brought action at the State Supreme Court level to have this residency requirement reduced to six months, but the court upheld the 12-month requirement. Word is that the students are appealing the state's decision, but the residency requirements will remain as is until the higher court determines otherwise.

Q. I read a lot about "open admissions" at other colleges. Do we have any programs for students who don't meet the traditional admissions requirements?

A. The University's first experiment in "open admissions" began last January when fifteen students from High Point were admitted through a cooperative program with the High Point Model Cities Commission. The program has been expanded to a maximum of 20 this year, most of them low income, but highly motivated to achieve. Another aspect of "open admissions" was introduced this fall with the admission of 25 special adults who did not meet the traditional admissions criteria. They were selected by the Office of Adult Students, a new service on campus which offers counseling to older students returning to campus.

Q. Through good luck rather than publicity, it has come to my attention that our progressive university is to condemn the Yum-Yum for its new administration building. Can we not preserve the Yum-Yum? Build over, around, or beside the building. We could be the only university in the world with an ice cream parlor in its administration lobby. Let us try to prevent the Yum-Yum from going the way of other monuments in Greensboro.

A. A Yum-Yum shop in the new Administration Building lobby! The idea has possibilities, but there are several factors to be considered. First of all, there are two ice cream shops that fall within the site needed for the new building. If one is preserved, it would be necessary to get a consensus as to which one. Second, it is our understanding that the State Division of Property Control has offered relocation assistance to the Yum-Yum so that the shop's superior ice cream may still be available in Greensboro. Finally, if the Yum-Yum remained on the corner and the Administration Building was built in the center of the block, in time objections undoubtedly would be raised to the appearance of the Yum-Yum next to the Administration Building.
